about

12. If an employee is absent from work for the period of being sick, the basic contractual term that the employer is required to do is to take a written statement from the employee as to the reasons for their absence. It is not necessary for a doctor to certify the absence if the employee is present.
13. There is no general rule that an employer must pay an employee during a period of absence from work. However, it is a common practice for employers to pay an employee during a period of absence from work. Further, an employer may be liable to disciplinary action or other consequences if it does not pay an employee during a period of absence from work.
14. An employee who has been present for a period of absence from work is not liable to disciplinary action if the absence is due to a medical condition that is not a medical condition.
